CHANGE OF MANAGEMENT

With this issue the Arizona Silver Belt, daily and weekly, and the job printing department of the business, passes from the management and control of Jos. H. Hamill to the Silver Belt Publishing company, composed of Alfred A. Cohn, Harry C. Holdsworth and H. H. Hiener, who have secured a long-time lease on the entire plant as well as the building in which the business has been conducted for the past thirty years. The new management has been associated with Mr. Hamill in the conduct of the business for some time past and will undertake no radical changes in the policy of the paper, but will try to maintain the high standard of excellence which the Silver Belt has attained under the guidance of Mr. Hamill, who has succeeded in placing it in the front rank of southwestern newspapers.

Mr. Hamill decided several months ago to retire from the publishing business, in which he has been actively engaged for a quarter of a century, and the deal closed yesterday is the climax to negotiations which have been pending between the interested parties for a number of weeks.

The retirement of this progressive newspaper man, who has been prominently identified with the upbuilding of Globe and the entire territory, and whose influence has been felt in the advancement of the press of Arizona, creates a vacancy in the local newspaper world that will take more than common effort and ability to fill. He severs his connection, leaving an honest, unimpeachable, flawless record and with the regrets of his former associates—the management of today.

"Better Tone in Hogs" announces the market column of the Chicago News. Must be grunting in a more musical key.

A cable dispatch announces that Mr. Taft rode over the Philippine mountains on a mule. Mr. Taft will forget the experience long before the mule will.

Bob Burdette says there are only five original jokes in the world, and he claims four of them. The mother-in-law quip, we hope, is not one of them.

Although "Baby" McKee is now old enough to take honors in his class at Yale, he will continue to come in for some good-natured kidding.

"Conscience never takes a vacation," says the Baltimore American. That's hardly necessary, since it so seldom suffers from overwork.

If Mr. Roosevelt will now pay a tribute to the gastronomic delights of fried chicken, the support of the colored brethren will be cinched.

Dan O'Leary, aged 65, walked 1,000 miles in 1,000 hours, but lots of other men are sure they could do that if they didn't have to work for a living.

The Pittsburg man who tried to shoot out a tooth because he hated to pay a dentist's fee has left his mourning relatives to settle an undertaker's bill.

Even the president's proclamation is not likely to convince that suspended Mississippi river pilot that he has a whole lot to be thankful for this year.

The other day a Lynn, Mass., shoe manufacturer failed with liabilities amounting to about $200,000, but even his creditors admit that he was game to the last.

Some London men are wearing buttons worth $100 each on their waistcoats, and being "a few buttons shy" will mean something more than usual in their case.

The Montgomery Advertiser says "radium is the costliest thing in the world—except experience." And nothing makes a man feel cheap quicker than experience.

The 15-year-old Pennsylvania boy who has killed five bears in ten days with an old-fashioned rifle is too young to realize that he has committed lese majeste of the worst kind.

A New Jersey man is advertising the fact that he would like to exchange a parrot for a good phonograph. He has evidently discovered that a phonograph is all right so long as you let it alone.

A New York judge has decided that "a wife has no right to throw dishes at her husband." Some men will feel easier now till their wives begin to juggle the heavy pieces of furniture.

Dark brown for early morning wear in men's clothing is suggested by a fashion journal. That would suit the taste of a good many men who get up with a coated tongue in the morning.

A young eastern minister preached one sermon and then wanted to quit the pulpit because he had told all he knew. A man like that would be a dismal failure in congress as well as in the ministry.

A learned contemporary devotes considerable space to the discussion of "the ethics of kissing," but a good many young people will continue the practice without even knowing the meaning of the word "ethics."

The Athens (Ga.) Banner wants Grover Cleveland to give the democratic party some advice on the platform and nominee for next year. To a man up a tree it looks as if the party is already getting more advice than it can assimilate.

OUR FINANCIAL SAVIORS

The Minneapolis Tribune justly says that the real saviors of the country in this time of financial stress have been "the great majority of the sane and calm Americans, whose accumulated money makes up the mass of deposits in the banks."

The Tribune truly says that "in finance and business, as in politics, the reliance of the country is on the fundamental reason and high average intelligence of the American people. These do not understand the science of banking and the complicated laws of political economy."

"But they have a firm, broad grasp of the large truth that the business of the country is done on the sound loan of bank funds, made up of millions of individual deposits; that these deposits are of use to their owners only when employed, and that to remove them from legitimate employment on good security would be to undermine the foundations of the prosperity of all."

"The millions of clear-headed and right-minded Americans who have contributed their dollars to sustain the fabric of business by leaving them in secure and fruitful employment have done far more to save the situation, now clearing everywhere, than the few men who have brought their millions from bank vaults to lend them where money is most needed."

This is giving the credit where the credit is rightly due. It is not the small depositor who is as a rule the dread of bankers. The first to withdraw their deposits are those with the large accounts, whose surplus funds mount into the thousands. The first to whisper doubts and to manufacture and catch rumors is not "the average man," but either the shark, who hopes to profit by disaster, or the business man whose vocabulary exceeds his mentality.

In 1893 men of large fortunes hid millions of dollars in safety deposit vaults. It was not exceptional to find a man who had $100,000 or more thus stored away, and he gloried, too, in his shrewdness and foresight.

The mainstay of the country in times of stress whether political or financial are primarily the men on the farms and in small communities far removed from the maddening crowd, whose savings in the country banks and whose products are the great financial reserve, and whose dispassionate brains are the great mental reserve. These are indeed the saviors of their country, and fortunate is the section in which they are of the majority.

IN ARIZONA

A ghost dance recently afforded amusement for the young society people of Williams. The proverbial "ghost walk" would be a more acceptable innovation in these panicky times.

Williams is making extensive shipments of cattle to Los Angeles.

At Flagstaff a hobo was arrested charged with stealing a boat. Naturally the presiding magistrate gave him a float.

Manager Clark announces that the United Verde at Jerome will not be shut down, but on the contrary the outputting force will be largely increased.

Ferries will be built at the mouth of the Virgin river and at Eldorado canyon in Mohave county. They will be operated on a toll basis, the county making up any shortage.

A Seattle capitalist is arranging to build a large apartment house in Tucson.

Prescott ball fans have made arrangements to have the Tucson ball team represent them at the Phoenix fair tourney.

Texas will aid Arizona in the battle for statehood.

Three have been indicted for murder by the grand jury at Tucson. George H. Wells, who killed Chas. Bauer in the Park View hotel, was one of those indicted.

The Greene-Canaan company has taken steps toward a complete reorganization of the company's system, looking toward a decided reduction in the price of producing copper. The heads of an army of high salaried officials will be taken off, the general scale of wages reduced, and producing with the usual large force will then be commenced.

The Old Pueblo mining company in Pima county has increased its working force.

Fifteen woolen blankets, stolen from a freight car, were found near Tempe.

Thieves entered L. L. Hardy's room at Tempe and stole his trousseau which contained a valuable gold watch and chain, money, a pocket knife and other valuables.

The scale of miners' wages in Bisbee has been reduced to the old schedule in vogue before the advance in copper. The reduction has been accepted and work will continue.

Tucson is still fighting for the removal of its tenderloin district.

People refusing to number their houses are to be arrested in Tucson, charged with violating an ordinance making it compulsory.

The big smelter at Cananea closed yesterday.

Overlock has paid the first 10 per cent on the obligations of the busted brokerage firm of Duey & Overlock, Bisbee.

J. Locca, with the exclamation, "I am going to shoot you," filled his wife full of birdshot at their home in Tucson. He then fled and is still at large. The woman will recover. No motive for the act is known.

J. Mathewson and H. L. Purdy, two Espee brakemen, have been arrested at Benson charged with robbing freight cars.

THE WEALTH THAT IS POOR

Long years, to pile up millions
He toiled the world along,
And if he heard a sweet bird sing
He sold it for its song.

To him the sun was silver,
The moon was wished-for gold,
The stars were dimes and dollars
That golden stories told.

And yet, his wealth—his station—
His name by Love forgot,
He cried to Love—a beggar,
But Love—it knew him not!

PNEUMONIA FROM MICE

How Disease Is Transmitted from the Little Animals to Man.

According to Dr. E. Fuller, of New York, the microbe of pneumonia is hurtful to man only after having passed through an animal sensible to its effects, the common mouse generally. In the mouths of many healthy people is to be found a microbe which greatly resembles that of pneumonia, and when inoculated in a mouse this microbe acquires considerable virulence.

If pneumonia is more frequent in winter and if robust people are exposed to it as much as weak individuals, this, in the opinion of Dr. Fuller, is due to the fact that from December to March there are more mice in the houses on account of the cold. These mice, young and old—the young are, above all, abundant in March—circulate everywhere in their search for food. Human saliva containing these microbes may easily be swallowed by them. They become diseased and die and the microbes which they contain and which have now become very virulent are dispersed.

Conveyed by the air or by any accidental contact, they may be introduced into the human organism, and pneumonia results. This disease has more chances of developing in people who live in rooms which are ill ventilated.

Dr. Fuller's theory gives a plausible explanation of the duration of pneumonia. The pneumonia bacillus does not remain indefinitely virulent in man; it loses its virulence little by little in eight or nine days, which is the dangerous period of pneumonia. The duration of the disease may be less if the infection has been brought about only by a small number of bacilli, or by bacilli having already an attenuated virulence. It is now recognized that pneumonia is not a true respiratory disease, but an acute infection, the pulmonary symptoms being only a manifestation of the local reaction of the tissues to the pathogenic germ. In the absence of a specific remedy or serum, what should be done is to augment the resistance of the organism, particularly the resistance of the heart, against the depressing effects of the toxins.

The insufficient oxygenation of the blood, indicated in some cases by the bluish color of the skin, is another indication of the treatment, whence the importance in some cases of inhalations of oxygen. Now, Dr. G. E. Rennie, believes that the open-air treatment is better fitted to those two indications.

The patients are placed on the veranda of the hospital, where they remain day and night. A screen is put in position at the head of the bed, so as to avoid the direct access of the cold wind. Out of twenty cases thus treated there was but one death, and this occurred in a man of sixty years, who died some hours after his entrance.

Moreover, no unfavorable symptoms attributable to the treatment supervened; on the contrary, the state of the patients appeared to be favorably influenced. In most of the cases, the crisis occurred at the end of two or three days and never took place more than a week after the first attack of shivering. It was rare that recourse was necessary to cardiac stimulants and strychnine.
